In today's world, a printer is an integral part of day to day printing activities. This is more so as we are living in a world that is increasingly dependent on digital information, and it is essential to have a decent printer to perform day to day printing activities with ease. At the same time, a printer is a vital piece of hardware that has to be maintained and cared for properly. One can invest money in high quality paper feeders or filters, yet these do not offer any sort of protection against spills, accidents or other such things. However, in some cases, a printer does not get the attention that it is actually due. So, today we will discuss features of a good desk top printer. What makes a good Desk Top Printer? A good desk top printer has to have the following attributes: 1. Good quality prints 2. Fast printing speed 3. Easy to use 4. Reliable printing 5. Does not require toner. "Easy to use" This should be first on any list of things that a good desktop printer should be equipped with. After all, the more convenient a printer is to use, the more likely users are to use it. And in this day and age where technology is king, it is important for a printer to possess the right attributes so as to be able to perform with speed and accuracy. Printer manufacturers have constantly been trying to provide a user friendly environment that is easy to use and understand, and due to this, the interface of a good printer is completely different from what it was a few years ago.

According to police, an argument over the governor's name on license plates turned into a verbal altercation that led to a physical fight. Francisco said a male customer, who was a driver at the DMV, also allegedly struck her. "The state had an outside contractor issue the policy for the names on the license plates. The DMV did not immediately respond for comment. "It's something we take very seriously," Francisco said. "You can imagine that it's not going to happen again. It was a customer there that caused it.
