Australian technology giant Telstra has moved to end a long-running legal battle with British law firm Mishcon de Reya, arguing that the firm should drop their attempts to recover costs from them. The dispute relates to an unpaid legal bill in the billions of dollars, and to Telstra's reluctance to pay. In a response filed to the High Court in

Melbourne, Telstra stressed that it had already paid out millions of dollars to Mishcon de Reya in what it said had been a "perfectly legal agreement." The firm argued that Telstra had agreed to pay it a daily rate of $1,000, and had not warned that it would scale that back to $400 when a new arrangement was reached. In a bid to have its bill paid, Mishcon de Reya brought an action that was then heard by Melbourne-based Justice John Dowsett. But in an application to the High Court, Telstra argued that the bill was no longer owed by them, and that they were never liable for such charges. It said the firm's new legal team, which it now describes as "rogue", had been placed on a retainer, with the firm promising to pay the firm's bills 3da54e8ca3
