The novel coronavirus has exposed a dire shortage of personal protective equipment, or PPE, that is needed to fight the virus and protect health care workers. In the US, hospitals and clinics have struggled to obtain N95 respirator masks and gowns, which are needed to protect health care workers from the virus, including its hazardous aerosols. As a result, hospital workers have had to improvise. In one Ontario hospital, for instance, workers have been advised to wear surgical masks and regular masks for patients they are not caring for. In Canada, there is a shortage of face shields for health care workers, as well as PPE gowns. Without PPE, some people in Canada are putting on homemade masks. The coronavirus pandemic has exposed a severe supply-demand gap for PPE that has been exacerbated by the COVID-19 outbreak in mainland China. The severe acute respiratory syndrome coronavirus 2 (SARS-CoV-2) is more contagious than the SARS-CoV virus that caused the 2003 outbreak, which took more than 8000 lives and cost more than $40 billion in damage. Now, the virus is spreading around the world. By the end of last week, it had spread to almost 200 countries. By the end of March, the World Health Organization (WHO) declared the outbreak a pandemic, which has led to more than a million infections and nearly 40,000 deaths. There have been many ways that the WHO has attempted to educate about the virus and help stop its spread, but these efforts have been hindered by lack of PPE. Before the outbreak, the WHO only distributed N95 respirators to countries that requested them, but when the outbreak began, the WHO modified its PPE strategy and asked all countries for its supply. However, the WHO's request for supplies was not responded to in a timely manner, leading to a large gap in supplies. "Countries from all regions need PPE, not just European countries or US states," said Davide Fazio, a professor in the School of Nursing at the University of Minnesota, who has worked for the WHO's health emergency program since 2004. "The WHO should be more aggressive." "It's disturbing to see that the WHO's supply chain is only responding Coloring Book 9: Little Monsters is a tiny application that requires children to fill in various line drawings with color, using multiple palettes and a simple set of controls. It does have a few drawbacks, but it is a fun and relatively straightforward educational app.

Extensive collection of drawings for your children to work with A total of 50 pictures are available in the full version of the program, plenty to keep your kids entertained for a long time. Given that they are only limited by their imaginations, they will likely wish to work on the same scene more than once, and it is easy to clear existing drawings. As you can probably tell from the application's name, the included pictures are all monster-related, but the creatures are harmless enough to be suitable for children of all ages. Fun drawing app that could use some improvements The tools your children have at their disposal are as simple as can be, which means that no lengthy instructions should be required. There are multiple color palettes to choose from, and sections can be filled in with a single mouse click. However, an undo function is not included. Also, while young children should find the background music and sound effects to be rather enjoyable, it is a shame that they cannot be disabled. Lastly, it would have been great if the application offered an export function, as it is only possible to print drawings directly. Also, multiple versions of the same picture cannot be stored separately, a feature what would have come in handy for children who share a computer. Straightforward educational application that can teach your children basic artistic skills On the whole, Coloring Book 9: Little Monsters is a great app for parents who want to provide kids with a way to have fun and learn useful skills at the same time.
