What's new in BeatBlasters III:

Beating Bellows 10-06-2017, 12:00 So, as I alluded to in the post about the congealed butter, it's happened again.The good butter went bad again.This time it didn't stick to the freezer wall too much, so I could salvage most of it.But it's an annual thing.We've tried to chill the "good" butter overnight to no avail; last spring the butter had a similar problem, but there wasn't enough "bad" butter to get a massive amount of congeal. Oh, and since I mentioned the butter congealing, the raw milk soap we've been creating the last few years has become very stiff.It takes a degree of effort to mix the lye and fats at all, but when it does go smoothly, the final lye/fat mixtures is silky smooth.This year the soap is crystal clear but rather stiff, unworkable. So, for the first time, both things arose when the kids went to teachers' events and we weren't at home the whole weekend.And as I mentioned on FB, we're having a convention in a few weeks and with that will be a one-on-one camp with younglings. Wasn't sure when/if that would happen, too. Guess it's happened. Nothing to do but put the food on the table and keep the next few nights short. Hubby: Hello, what's up?Me: A little crumbly tonight.Pants do up, crash on bed. Home all day, pay bills; Bal: “Did you clean the refrigerator?”Me: “What?”Pants do up.Coat down. Bootsie: Where are you? Pants do up.Long walk for a change.Weird lightning warnings.Storm's been building for a long time.Try to sleep, can't. Hubby: Do you have to work tomorrow?Me: Yeah, I'll be early in the morning.Pants do up. Work all day, half a shift, home all afternoon.Bootsie: Can you pick me up from school? Pants do up, out to church in pajamas.Snowballs! More kids gone since school, housework that needs to happen.Hungry, tired, ow do you transform this complex log function in cosine to the standard log function (e^x)? I have a equation of the form $e^{\{z\ln\{z\}}}$, how do you transform this to $z^z$? The function s when you try it on Wolframalpha. A: Well, this is not an elementary function, so I think that you should try some equivalents in order to rewrite $e^{\{z\ln\{z\}}}$ so that it becomes, for nce $$e^{\{z\ln\{z\}}}=z^{\{\ln\{z\}\exp\{z\ln\{z\}}}=z^{\{z(\ln\{z\})}}$ so that, by substitution $z^z$, you get $$e^{\{z\ln\{z\}}}=z^{\{z\}}$ Or, for a simpler case, try $e^{\{\ln\{z+1\}}}=\frac{e^{\{e^{\{\ln\{z+1\}}\}}}\{e\}=\frac{e^{\{\sin\{\ln\{z+1\}}\}}\{e\}}$ Gallium nitride and related materials present exceptional properties for transistors, light emitting diodes, and the Gallium nitride and related materials may offer superior properties for electronics as compared to both gallium arsenide (GaAs) and silicon. The perceived advantages of GaN include high er density, high efficiency, high breakdown voltage, and high thermal conductivity. In addition, GaN has a wide band gap.
