I am developing an application in JSF/EJB3.0 with stateful session beans. The client (that will call the EJB) shall receive information about the access permission (implemented using Roles). Is it possible to assign a session bean to the user, after login? The user is in a role, this role has access to the session bean and some other beans/services. The problem is, that the role assigned to the user is not persistant. After the user logs out and logs in again, the user will have a different role and the session bean will have to receive the new access permitions. I was looking at states, but there are no information about the situation I described. Thanks for your help. A: In that case the user has to be logged in to the application every time he calls the bean's methods. I usually use the security framework of the application server in order to be sure that the authenticated user is really the one he pretends to be.
