In a fantasy world where travelers have lost their way. Legends say that the world is surrounded by land and sea full of powerful beings and monsters, and the lands between are full of monsters and adventures, a traveler who returns from the dead can be seen by those who long for a return to their beloveds. Living alongside these travelers are the fey. These are creatures who have lost their name and their name and their spirit, and they seek to revive their names, their names, their soul. The traveler is you, and your story begins on a quest for an answer to the fateful words that a wind whispered at your wakeup. Venutius Hund (Count Hund) (died 1269) was a German nobleman in the service of the House of Wettin, who had two daughters, Adelaide of Schwerin and Ortrud of Breuberg. He was the grandson of Gotfried I, Count of Brandenburg and Bertha of Werdenberg-Hildburg. The death of King Ottokar II of Bohemia in 1253 brought Hund and his family into a difficult situation. Hund and his cousin, Count Otto I of Schaumburg-Lippe, had the support of the Dukes of Saxony and Thuringia, but the other Wettin family members wanted to support King Béla IV of Hungary, as they had their own quarrels with the Saxon Dukes. Hund, with his good relationship to the Hungarian king, offered him the county of Hirschberg in the March of Lusatia. After Béla IV took that castle in the middle of September 1253, Hund was given the castle of Schwerin by his cousin Otto I of Schaumburg-Lippe on behalf of his brother-in-law
